Aim of Site and Plan of Attack

The aim of the site was to show off my skills in a way that would appeal to potential employers. The best way to do this was add several components to keep the site users engaged and impressed.

The following components were included in the final site:

- Flexbox, Clamp (for font-size) and Media Breakpoints to keep the site responsive no matter what device it was being viewed on
- A floating navigational bar at the top of all pages to make it easy to move through the site
- Hover CSS rules to create a feel of engagement for the user
- A Contact Me form that when the “Send” button is pressed, an email is generated for the user
- A looping active keyframe rule that updates text periodically

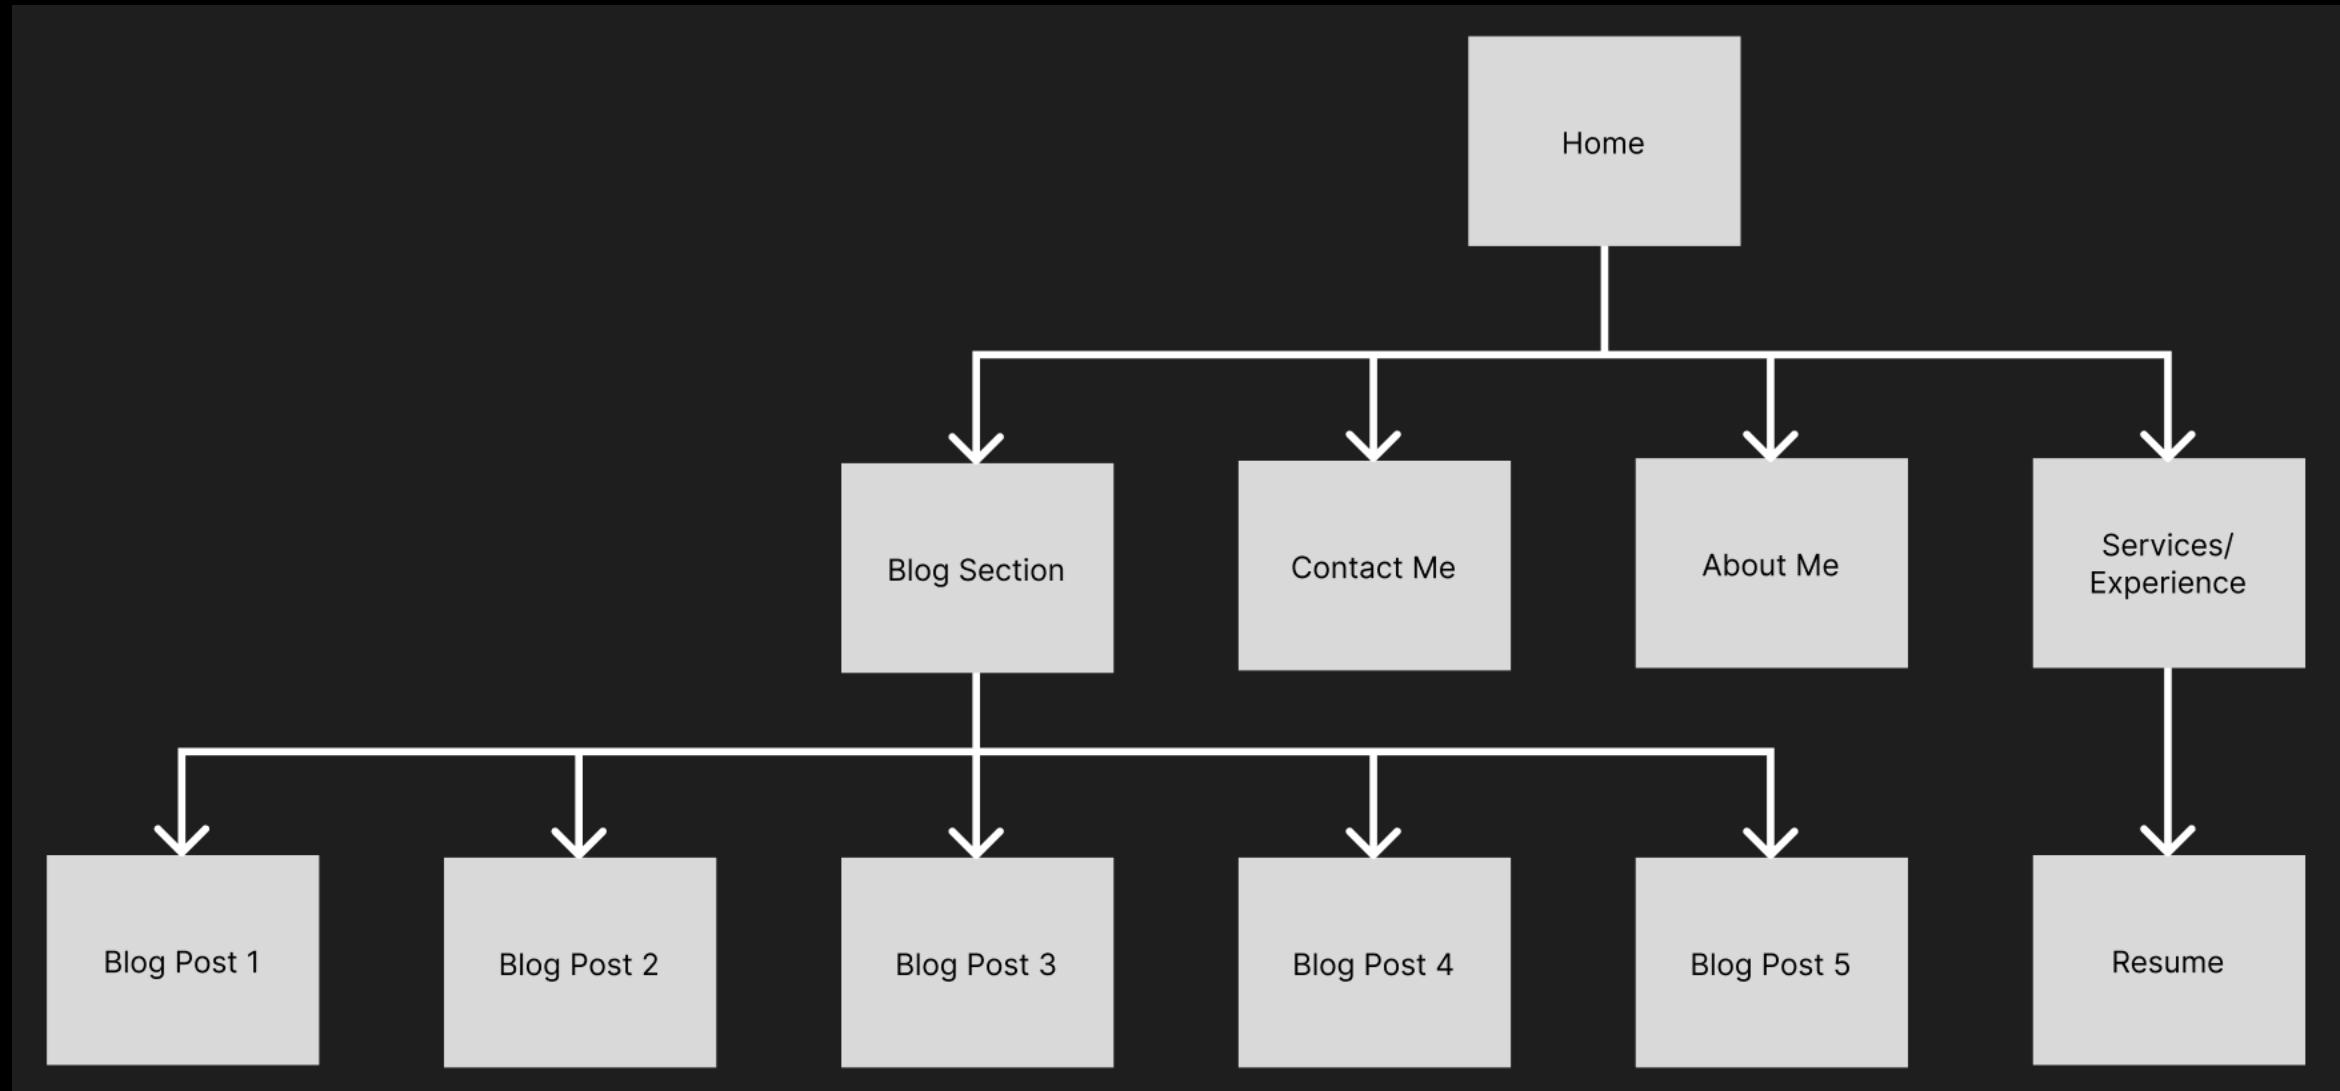

How it Ended Up

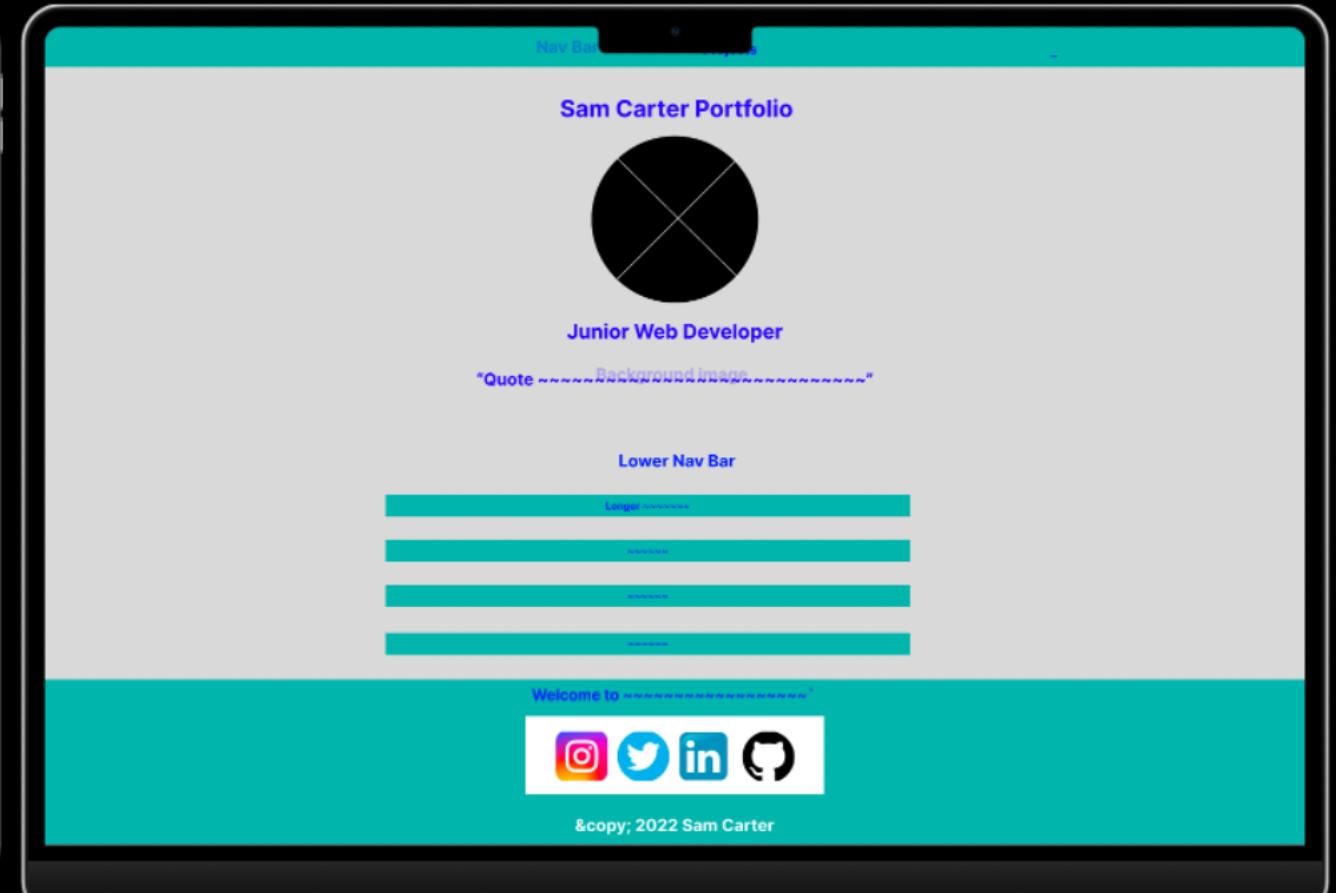

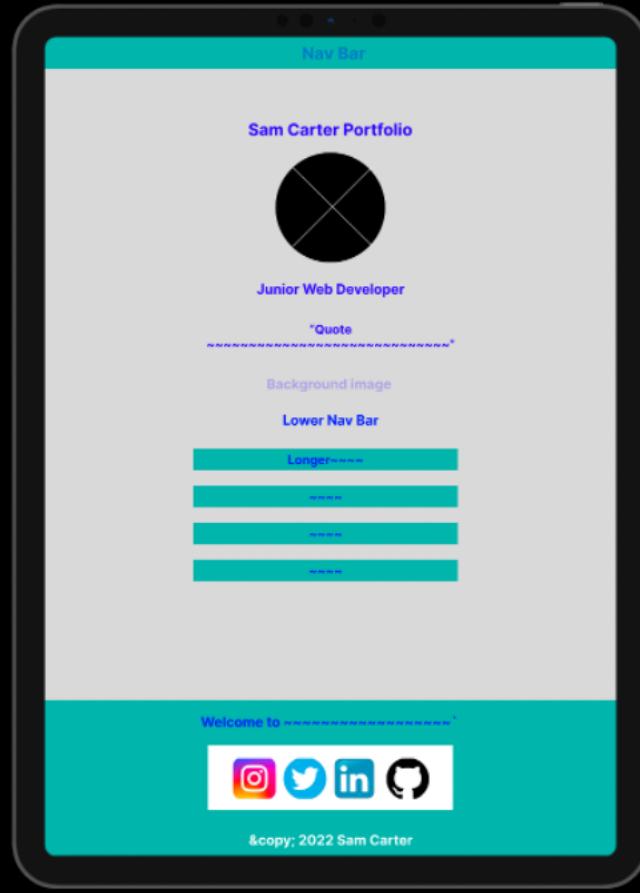

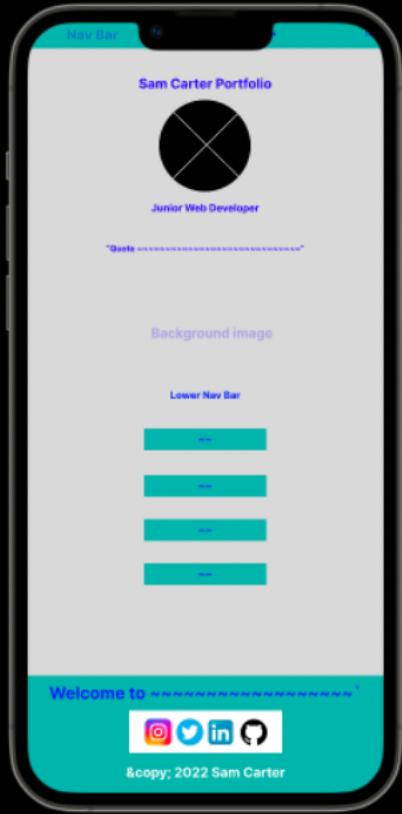

My overall choice of design included calming colours and the background is an image of a local icon in Brisbane (Story Bridge). The colour theory concept my website design would fall under is “Split complementary” as there is a predominately blues, greens and whites providing calm and cooling tones along with a harsher and more dangerous orange.

The main challenge I faced along the way was if my ideas could be done with just HTML/CSS. There were a few ideas like advanced moving animations and a burger menu but after having a bit more of a look into it, thought the better of them and went for some slightly simpler options. The blog articles also opened my eyes to copyright licensing. I ended up doing a bit of research on whether images from shows/movies could be included. They could have fallen under “fair-use” but I decided to go with images from Unsplash while still citing where they were from.

Overall, I had an enjoyable experience making the website. My perfectionist ways hurt me a bit at first, but I adapted along the way and made sure to try and control the perfectionist in me. The assignment did teach me that design side of website creation may not be for me. Development is much more my thing. All in all, It was a great start to my web development journey and look forward to revisiting the site later in the course.

The SVG images will continue to grow up to 80px at which point the container will also stop scaling

The words that appear after the “-” on the iPad sized devices and above are wrapped in a span element with display set to “none”. An @media query then sets them to display at 600 width and up

The band site that Sam created for Muse is better than their official site – MuseLover642

Professional Skills and Experience

From a young age I have always wanted to work in the technology field. I have worked the past three years in a Desktop support role which gave me a taste for the more specialised side of technology. This inspired me to apply for Coder Academy and strive to reach my goal of learning how to code and be a successful web developer.

This inspired me to apply for Coder Academy and strive to reach my goal of learning how to code and be a successful web developer. Already in my short time at Coder Academy I have learned so much. The most important skill I have been given is the basis to be able to go out and learn new HTML/CSS techniques and tricks myself. If you don't believe in magic, you may want to avoid hovering your mouse over the following boxes:

This Client reviews `` element uses a keyframe rule to change the content to cycle through 4 “reviews”

Once 600px device/window width is reached, a media query changes the flex direction on the box container and the boxes are displayed horizontally

Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet consectetur adipisicing elit. Eaque tempore earum iure maxime labore delectus magnam nihil distinctio quis repudiandae! Maxime totam ducimus quis exercitationem fugit tempore facere, non molestiae.

Interests and Hobbies

Apart from my interest in the ever evolving field of technology, I like to spend my spare time watching sport, gaming and travelling. The sporting competitions that really captivate me are Formula One, The National Basketball Association (NBA) and League of Legends (esports). There's nothing better than experiencing the live atmosphere at one of these sporting events.

Flexbox is again used on a container housing images to make them responsively change size and wrap.

The images above have a hover effect/animation applied to them to reveal text. This was achieved by giving the `` element an opacity of 0 until hovered where after a 1s transition opacity changes to 1. Positioning was achieved by altering the "Position" attribute of the `` to "Absolute".

These are required fields

Radio type check boxes were used for “Preferred Contact Method” as only one of the options should be ticked. This is enforced by giving both `<input>` elements the same “name”

The container containing the form and contact information is changed to a flex display using a @media query at 900px and up. In the same query, the contact details get a matching background to stand out to the site user
